

Zinnia elegans (zinnia), like other flowers in the Asteraceae (aster family), has a composite flower. What appears to be a solitary flower is actually an inflorescence called a capitulum with a flattened disc bearing numerous tubular flowers or florets with five short lobes crowded in a single receptacle surrounded by an outer ring of ray florets.

© Christa Watters