

Pruinose squash bee (Peponapis pruinosa), pictured on a butternut squash flower, feeds primarily on pollen and nectar from squash, pumpkin, and other members of the Cucurbitaceae. It is found across the United States. According to BugGuide, when nests are built near squash plants, males often sleep within closed squash blooms.

© Mary Free