

Syrphidae member, narcissus bulb fly (Merodon equestris), was introduced accidentally —probably transported with bulbs— from Europe to the United States where it is now widespread in narcissus-growing regions. This male is a convincing bumble bee mimic and feeds on nectar. It is a pest in its larval form, overwintering in and feeding on plant bulbs.

© Mary Free